

Presentation Tips

- Repeat key points several times during your session.
- A few good points are worth much more than many topics that have to be rushed as a result of time constraints.
- Include information on what the risks are and ways to avoid injury.
- Be hands-on. Showing pictures of people who have skin cancer from too much sun exposure increases the awareness of the issue. Let the participants try on hats that shield their face from the sun. This will give them prevention strategies that they can experience.
- Ensure you let the organizers know your space requirements. This will ensure your space is conducive to learning. If you are too close to the next station you may have competing noise levels and distractions.
- Encourage hands-on interaction as much as possible. Children learn differently and need reinforcement in several ways to make the message clear.
- Relate any written material that will be taken home in the resource bag to the topic at hand.
- Have fun!
